

IN THE CLAIMS:

Claim 1-4 (canceled);

5 (previously amended). A wound dressing comprising:

a support strip of material having a body-attaching side; and also having adhesive being disposed about and upon said body attaching side, said support strip of material being made of flexible plastic and having a plurality of aerated openings being spaced about and being disposed through said support strip of material;

a pad member being securely attached upon said body-attaching side of said support strip of material, said pad member being generally a gauze and being centrally attached upon said body-attaching side of said support strip of material; at least one wound-healing agent being disposed upon said pad member, said at least one wound-healing agent including a syrupy substance known as honey, said at least one wound-healing agent also including a wound-sealing wax being disposed upon said gauze along with said honey; and protective strips of material being removably disposed over said body-attaching side including said pad member and said at least one wound-healing agent.

6 (original). A wound dressing as described in claim 5, wherein said protective strips of material are made of flexible fabric and have end portions which overlap one another when detachably attached to said support strip of material.
